Founded in 1803, Maison Arthus-Bertrand specialises in making medals, badges and decorations, jewellery, and marketing products.

Down the generations, the company has carried on and enriched its expertise.

Embroidery, engraving, jewellery: it carries on several traditions. As the official supplier to the Grand Chancery of the Legion of Honour, it goes on making decorations, together with ceremonial military flags, while continuing to enrich its medal collections. Meanwhile, it also creates new jewellery, teaming up with artists or taking inspiration from old masterpieces in prestigious museums.

In collection after collection, the company has affirmed its creative spirit and its ability to put its expertise at the service of its period. As such, it has created many Academicians' swords, designed and produced multiple trophies, launched the fashion of lapel badges, created watches, etc.

Its rare expertise focuses in particular on the production of religious and commemorative medals and decorations.
