Founded in 1930 on its current site, "Marbrerie Walqueman" was originally passed down the family of a line of masons starting in 1870.

It is specialised in cutting, forming and fine polishing stone. It is located in the north of France where a local stone, known as "blue stone", is used. This is a noble, non-porous and frost-resistant stone. Working this particularly hard stone requires long experience and special knowledge.

Marbrerie Walqueman works marble and granite and stands out in the profession thanks to its ability to work on blue stone. The services it offers include interior design: kitchens, bathrooms, fireplaces; and external design: wall coverings, doorsteps, lintels, tiled floors, fountains, etc. The company also works on local heritage buildings, including historical monuments. The company works on order.
