The Hamers workshop perpetuates a family tradition of diamond cutting going back over four generations.

Its particular know-how involves a rare technique: invisible mounting of diamonds, for Van Cleef & Arpels.

The rarity of its know-how is linked both to the complexity of the techniques used (diamond is the hardest material in the world) and to the rarity of diamond cutters: there are only ten of them in France.

The workshop works principally as a subcontractor for major brands of upmarket jewellery and only to order.
